DART Organizers Institute

A Paid Field School for Community Organizers

DART is now accepting applications for the 2006 DART Organizers Institute - a paid, four-month field school for people interested in launching a career in community organizing.

In the summer of 2006, learn to do grassroots community organizing from the best in the business then go onto fulltime salaried positions. After four months of paid training, you will leave the DART Organizers Institute with a strong orientation to community organizing.

Our classroom and field training covers such topics as:

- Identifying and training local leaders
- Strategic planning and issue cutting
- Researching and targeting decision makers
- One-on-One community building
- Taking successful direct action on community issues
- Fund raising for the long-haul

The DART Organizers Institute will begin June 18, 2006 with a seven-day classroom orientation and continue with fifteen weeks of infield training at one of DART's twenty-one grassroots, community organizations located in cities throughout Ohio, Florida, Virginia, Kentucky, and Indiana.

Graduates from the DART Organizers Institute will join dozens of other successful organizers as fulltime, salaried staff members working to build the power of low-moderate income communities to win victories on important issues in their community.

Take Direct Action on Issues of Justice

Using strategies and techniques taught by the DART Center, organizations throughout the United States have held government and economic systems accountable and won important victories on a broad set of race and poverty issues including:

- Education reform in low-performing public schools,
- Affordable housing and healthcare
- Police Misconduct
- Fair immigration policies, etc.
